The West Virginia Aging & Disability Resource Center (ADRC) is a professionally staffed office that assists seniors and persons with disabilities find appropriate long-term services and supports. The ADRC professionals also help individuals apply for those services that suit their independent living and long-term care needs. An individual will receive as much assistance as necessary to locate and coordinate services.

The West Virginia Aging & Disability Resource Center (ADRC) and our partner agencies are a bridge to available resources to assist you and your family with questions about long-term care services and supports that may allow you or your loved one to remain at home and active in the community for as long as possible.

At the ADRC, you will find professionally trained staff that can answer your questions about programs and other resources available in your area, how to access these services, and can also assist you in applying for those programs and supports that best suit your independent living and long-term care needs.

The ADRC is a state-funded resource and is a division of the West Virginia Bureau of Senior Services. There is a wide-ranging list of resources available to you on our web site. This list is offered for informational purposes and to assist you. The West Virginia Bureau of Senior Services does not endorse or recommend any agency or business listed. The help that you receive from the ADRC will empower you to make informed choices and decisions regarding long-term care. It is recommended that you contact an ADRC office for more specific information and for a comprehensive assessment of your needs.

Services offered at the ADRC are available to anyone, at no charge, regardless of age or income.
